DEFAULTING CASE STUNS CINCINNATI BY ITS MYSTERY

Disappearance of Money Is Completely Enshrouded With Secrecy.

RAILROAD OFFICIALS SAY NO PROSECUTION

Another Man and a Woman Are Now Admitted to Be Involved in Case.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 9.—The case of C. L. Warriner, defaulter-extraordinary against the Big Four railroad, has become the most astounding money mystery in the history of Cincinnati. These are some of the remarkable features of the secrecy-enshrouded affair: Warriner stole $643,000 from the Big

Using a lengthy detailed statement by Louis R. Glavis, former special agent of the General Land Office, Collier's, out today, again stirs up the water power and coal land scandal, that looked far removed from public scrutiny by the prompt dismissal of the active young chief of the field division.

Glavis in his statement reviews his trouble with Secretary Ballinger over the coal lands and lays bare the workings of the department in the West in a manner that prompts the editors of Collier's to label his recital "The Whitewashing of Ballinger."

An additional label asks the question: "Are the Guggenheims in charge of the Department of the In-

PRINTED WITHOUT COMMENT.

The statement is printed without comment on the part of Collier's other than the headings. It is in the main merely a more detailed account of the trouble between Glavis and Secretary Ballinger, and is used by the former chief of the field division to question the act of the President in removing him from office. For his part in going over the heads of his immediate superiors he makes excuse and declares he acted only because he believed the Alaska coal lands were in danger.

His statement, he declares, is made for the sole purpose of aiding in arousing public sentiment in time to avert the danger to the national resources and would not be made even now were it not possible to save for the Government many thousands of acres.
